I also got it to work with Grand Theft Auto Vice City on Windows XP. The Gta Vice city ultimate trainer now works with my pc . Category:Grand Theft Auto Category:GTA trainersAustralia's election time is used for a lot of things - supermarket shopping sprees, sport matches, football finals, even, sadly, elections. But when you have the country's longest-serving federal MP, who is in a position of great power and prestige, weighing in on national campaigns, chances are there's someone going to get short shrift, right? As voting day approaches, media coverage on federal politics is ramping up. On Thursday a report was released on how the Australian Greens' move to join an increasingly fractured coalition within the Parliament will affect the election. While Labor MP Malcolm Turnbull has won back national headlines with his proposed policy of connecting Australia to the China-backed Trans-Pacific Partnership, his fellow Coalition MPs have been quarrelling about what sort of "Trump" minister should replace him as the acting prime minister, and who will be best able to push the agenda of their party. Then there was the infamous Nick Xenophon's comments last week, on Australian news website Insiders, about how the Coalition could have faced a double election, with state polls on the same day and a federal election on a different date. As federal politics has proved to be super-challenging lately, the media has been keen to play catch-up, on the potential pitfalls facing the Coalition and Labor, and the spill-in-the-sphere effect that the NXT electoral move has had. There has been plenty of focus on the issue of the Liberal party splitting, and whether the former Howard government ministers - Malcolm Turnbull, Chris Bowen, Bruce Scott and Joe Hockey - will be able to "hold their line" and keep the party together. Yes, there is pressure, especially with Australians this close to the election date, that a Donald Trump victory will usher in an era of "Trumpism" not seen since the 1980s. But there is a real sense that the opposition, led by Labor's Bill Shorten, is well placed to fight this one. The Liberal and Labor parties still boast large and loyal electorates, the electorate hasn't changed much, voters are still of a similar ilk, and as the primary vote percentages change, the result won't change too much. With the Greens, of course, it 3da54e8ca3
