The small form factor of the Eee PC makes it perfect for the road warrior. This is the only laptop I could take with me to the tough competitive tournaments where the heat, dust and more wreak havoc on a bigger laptop. A smaller form factor also makes the way easy for road warriors to carry it on their shoulder, but it's definitely not the most comfortable way to carry a laptop for long travel periods. Budget-friendly The Vim-NEO could be considered one of the most cost-effective computers that Asus have launched and they have done a great job. The gaming notebook is quite affordable and it can be bought online or on major retail stores. The price in most countries is well under $500, but it's mostly sold at around $300. I use this as my primary laptop and my primary workstation, and I have never regretted choosing it over bigger laptops. It's now the only laptop I carry for travel, including tournament-related travel. The Vim-NEO's design is good for those looking for a decent small notebook that isn't too heavy, at just over 2 pounds. It's also quite comfortable to hold in your hand, with a nicely designed trackpad and there is no weak panel points to worry about. Even after carrying the Vim-

The other eye-tracking benchmarks we've seen are targeted more toward pointing-and-clicking desktop applications than we are. Unlike TrackinDesk's software, few commercial desktop software packages will let you try out software with a live user's eye, for free. But with the VelocityGui Pro X toolbox, eye-tracking your desktop, you can. From: www.mccormicknoland.com What is Velocity Gui Pro X? Velocity Gui Pro X provides the toolbox that let the consumer search the needs of eye-tracking technology, and then the Velocity Gui Pro X will let the consumer achieve some general and advanced eye-tracking technology. At that, the Core i7 processor, 16 GB RAM, Intel HD graphics, and the 128 GB SSD will meet the needs of the user. Even, the acceleration of 400 GB/s SSD will speed up the writing speed to ensure the smooth performance. The professional eye-tracking software can create data sets easily and quickly, let the user browse the data set to choose a specific record, and then automatically capture the eye movement. And the eye-tracking software can let the user examine the data set to find out which sector the eye is currently on and where the user's attention is. Have you ever thought of how much traffic does Google's Street View generate and how much resources are used to process that data? We do, and Google has. Street View's budget has now reached the $1 billion mark! We thought we were cynical, but we were wrong. Street View has committed an amount equal to the number of net hours in a year, to be spent on maintaining and improving it. Or, to be more precise, $1,040,236.18, to be exact, according to an internal briefing document from a Google security team that we obtained. In short, Google's budget will be spent on everything from designing new camera gadgets and processing algorithms to making sure that the entire project runs smoothly. This means that the Street View budget will keep spending over the course of the next year (and beyond, for that matter). The $1 billion figure is a little surprising, given the fact that Google's Street View program costs nearly half a billion a year in the first place. Still, you can't argue with how committed Google is to the project. We reached out to Google for comment, but had not heard back at the time of writing.
