The bridge, which is a former main thoroughfare, crosses the railroad tracks of CSX Transportation to provide access to the Fayetteville MARTA station. History The bridge was constructed in 1903 by the Scott-Moncrieff Bridge Company. At the time, the bridge was the longest wooden railway bridge in the country. It was named for its designer, Richard M. Cobb. The bridge originally consisted of 137 wooden Pratt trusses and weighed. The bridge was one of the first to incorporate elliptical steel vertical members, a new design that was patented by John G. Roebling and used in a number of other bridges. The design would later be used in the Brooklyn Bridge. The bridge was initially built to connect the Fayetteville Depot of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad, later to be absorbed into the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad and then into the

Seaboard Coast Line Railroad, to the Clermont depot of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, which later became part of the Seaboard Air Line Railroad. In the 1950s the bridge was expanded with a second span and converted to a double-track railroad bridge with one track for the CSX rail line. Both tracks are used by the CSX. The bridge has always connected two different areas in Clermont and Fayetteville. Around 1975 the bridge was on the Atlanta and West Point Railway of the Georgia and Florida Railway (G&F) and was converted

[A case of multiple lipomas and amyloidosis of the small intestine--unusual coexistence of soft-tissue sarcoma and amyloidosis]. A case of a 65-year-old man with multiple lipomas and amyloidosis of the small intestine is reported. Twenty years had passed since abdominal ultrasonography showed multiple hyperechoic masses in the abdominal cavity. The tumor tissue was surgically removed, and it was pathologically confirmed to be lipoma. Amyloidosis of the small intestine was diagnosed after the operation. A few years after the operation, the patient was admitted to our hospital with the diagnosis of colorectal cancer. Tumor marker (CEA, CA19-9) levels were within the normal limits, and no tumor was detected by gastrointestinal endoscopy. Exploratory laparotomy revealed three large lipomatous tumors with gastric erosion and tumor markers were elevated in the serum. The histological findings of the stomach and the large intestine were adenocarcinoma and amyloidosis, respectively. The tumor cells were mainly sialomucin positive. It was concluded that multiple lipomatous tumors and amyloidosis may coexist in the same patient. Everybody knows the songs that are forever associated with a certain time and place: Edelweiss, Pizza, Through the Fire,

Salt and Peppa. Ever listened to the music on radio stations that described your hometown or where you went to high school? Those are the musical memories of The Greatest Generation, as the kids of World War II and Korea were called. They lived in a glorious time when America was strong and America was good. I grew up in that
