Q: What is the etiquette for asking for an extension on an application that is already submitted to the department? I have submitted my application for a faculty position, which is going to be reviewed by our department's hiring committee. They want me to give them a few extra weeks so that they can use their time and resources to examine my application more thoroughly. I am wondering what the appropriate etiquette is for asking for an extension on my application. It is not strictly necessary for me to have an extension, but it would be useful if I had it.
