A human gene encoding the opioid mu receptor was isolated by means of a genomic probe prepared from the human mu opioid receptor cDNA. The gene consists of about 3.4 kb of DNA containing one intron, three exons, and an open reading frame coding for a 482 amino acid protein. This cDNA was fused in-frame to the yeast selectable marker. The fused construct was used to isolate clones of the gene by polymerase chain reaction amplification of regions containing the 5' and 3' flanking sequences and the coding region of the gene. Seven overlapping clones of 6.1-8.1 kb were isolated which contain the whole coding region and flanking sequences of the mu opioid receptor gene. All of the clones share an identical sequence with the exception of a (CA)n repeat located approximately 2.4 kb upstream of the transcription start site. An analogous repeat (TATC)n was previously identified in the mouse mu opioid receptor gene. This suggests that the repeat sequence is shared by members of the opioid receptor gene family.Q: Is there a way to set a css class name to the name of a node attribute? I use backbone.js and jquery. I want to create a class name to the content of the {{ node.attr }} attribute. Is that possible? If it is, could you give me an example? A: Yes you can do that. I suggest you to use jquery. $("#someID").attr("class", "className"); or jQuery selectors can be used. $("#someID >.className").attr("class", "className"); If you are using Backbone set the attribute to a View: set: function(attrs) { this.model.set(attrs); this.$el.removeClass('error'); d0c515b9f4

I'm working on the song 'Everyman' by Mark Knopfler: I get that the starting chord is a G Major, but I can't work out if the second chord is an F Major or an F Minor. Normally the F Minor chord should be played by strumming the first note on the third beat, with the second note on the fourth beat, using the G Major chord as accompaniment. Here is the first beat of that second chord: But is that correct and is there any significance to the chord progression? A: There are several ways to do this, but on the whole, the most common method is to play the second note of the chord on the downbeat. The tricky part is to make sure to come back on the root of the chord from a different chord shape, which you can check by looking at the chord progression. Here is an example using the progression (we start in A minor): So we come back to the root of the chord: And
