What's new in Bikerz:

: Chinese Lulu Wang Calls Out Gun-Riding Parents Lulu Wang is a rising star in Hollywood. Having won the Sundance Kids category with her dramatic story Chang and Eng, the actor and filmmaker currently stars in Netflix’s upcoming original series Easy, which is being touted as a show for teens that doesn’t judge and features a diverse cast of characters of color. In a recent interview with HuffPost, Wang discusses Wang’s work in society and stands against gun-toting and racist parents. She also wants the world to know how prejudiced other countries are against China. HuffPost: How do you feel about the gun-carrying parents at the end of your film? Lulu Wang: The ending is bittersweet. It’s a deliberate slow motion with her dad crossing his arms over his chest. In some ways, it’s great in a way [as his arms are crossed] like I’ve got you. I take you, I protect you, your shadow, you just bring my kid. But what I think he’s trying to say is, I don’t agree with you. In our history, there’s racism. You’re my own people, you’re you. My own people. View photos Story continues The guy gets in a car, he has a woman with him, he slams the door in the guy’s face. I think he was trying to protect her. I thought the father was giving off body language and his position on the ground, like literally waiting. [The character who knocks him out] was more powerful. I was like, that’s how it could be interpreted. I said to our editor, the producer, if you think we can get away with saying that and everybody understands that there’s a gun in there. If the gun is used to protect, that’s kind of hot. That’s a good moment. ... The father is defending his son. Let’s talk about a gun. It’s one of the most heavily-regulated guns in the world. We had to test fire it and edit it. It’s on a trip. They have to test fire it first. They only allowed us to test fire it once. I actually asked my dad if we needed a second weapon because this is a moment where
