pocket on the horizontal length of the sclera. Strabismus surgery is performed with the aim of achieving binocular alignment. The fixation points of the two eyes must be accurately placed to avoid confusion, and a scleral depression depth that is adequate for this purpose should be achieved. The influence of the depth of the excursion of the inferior rectus muscle and the effect on the horizontal length of the sclera were evaluated in a study of twenty-two patients. The depth of the inferior rectus muscle pocket, measured intraoperatively, was constant in 17 of the 22 patients. The horizontal length of the sclera decreased as the depth of the pocket increased; the distance between the center of the cornea and the sclera at the six-o'clock position also decreased. The depth of the excursion of the inferior rectus muscle was constant in one patient and decreased in twenty. The depth of the scleral depression was adequate for the placement of the fixation points of both eyes in nineteen of the twenty-two patients.

Augustus Augustus Augur Austen (September 14, 1812 – November 20, 1867), a Republican and the first Governor of the Navajo Nation, was a member of the Texas Legislature for two terms in the 1850s. He was the first governor of Utah after the United States purchased Utah from the Mormons in 1848, where he was governor from 1849 to 1852. He was the last governor of Arizona Territory before Arizona became a state in 1912.

Biography Early years Augustus Augur Austen was born in Carter County, Tennessee, son of Augustus and Priscilla Austen (née Bartlett). His father was a farmer, planter and manufacturer of whipstocks (a large, heavy device used
