Our lives are complex, turbulent and confusing. We have an interesting, rich, diverse family and friends. New surroundings should produce new experiences and feelings. Unfortunate as it may sound, I have always had a friend I called "the murderer." I have known her since elementary school. We had different social groups: She was the one who got invited to the school dances, to birthday parties, to sleepovers. And she was the one who was usually in my group of friends, girls who called each other by their first names. When one or another of us would get into an argument, she would show up in the middle of the whole thing to make us happy again. I just knew of the murderer. From elementary school into high school, I thought of her as some dark, shadowy figure. It never even occurred to me that she had a real name. When I was 16, she attended a dance in my hometown. I had never been to a dance before and I don't know if that was just the norm in our school or whether it was only for the popular crowd. All the teenagers were dressed up to the nines, with madras plaid skirts and multicolored blouses. (The leotard look had arrived but hadn't exploded yet.) I didn't know how to dance. I only knew my usual, wobbly clumsiness. But the murderer was competent in all the waltz steps that everyone thought were coming from God. I saw her on the dance floor and she didn't look twice at me. She was with a crowd of her former friends. They all seemed more sophisticated than I. They looked d0c515b9f4
