Q: How to identify by ID and SubscriptionID with Node.js and Apple push notifications? I want to implement in node.js an application which is subscribed to push notifications for an iPhone. I understand that the application identifier is a required part. If I use the existing application with same bundleID, I can send the push notifications. But how to set the application identifier? Is it as a static value? If so, it is known by Apple. My questions are: How to identify an application by its bundleID/subscriptionID? I need to get the device token for sending push notifications. How can i get that? If I set the bundleID of the application, can I use the static identifier, or do I have to register a new identifier? Thanks a lot in advance.

A: When you create an Apple Push Notification Service certificate, you need to give an unique identifier for your app. You have the choice between a client certificate (only the device can use it) and a server certificate. You can use the same identifier with both certificates. When the device receive the first push notification, it will ask for a token to be sent to your server. When it receive the token, it will store it for later and send each future notifications through it.

Q: Duplicates in LINQ To SQL How can I tell LINQ to SQL to ignore objects with duplicate names? I have a table called Articles that looks like this: Columns: ArticleName Row 0: Article 1 Row 1: Article 2 Row 2: Article 3 Row 3: Article 4 Row 4: Article 5 If I use a LINQ query like this: from u in db.Articles select u LINQ to SQL thinks that Article 2 is also an article called Article 1. How can I tell LINQ to ignore records that have the same name? Note that this is not Category:Italian-language surnamesI'm trying to record a fun little show for a group of friends. I've been using the Quest 22, which I love, but I'm looking into options that might make things a little easier. Is there a good option for a microphone that doesn't cost a fortune? I'd want a pretty sensitive and robust digital recorder. I'd also love to have a headphone jack for monitoring. Nothing in your budget. The mic's built-in LDC recorder has a nominal input of 88dB with about 12dB of headroom, which is a bit better than most conventional mics. The preamp section is pretty "pedestrian" -- no comparison to anything marketed as "high-end". So, there you go. For an inexpensive mic, I'd recommend the M-Audio B48U AT-113. It can run for $200. It has a minimum input level of 89 dB and a max output of 104 dB. It has an internal headphone jack if you want to monitor it. I'd also like a solid state recorder, and those can get pretty expensive. An interface, like the Sound Devices 899 or something from Rode, is your best bet. The Rode HD555 is cheap and also has a built-in headphone jack. It doesn't do anything amazing, but it does the job without straining to meet audiophile specs.

_____ The only way to do you-know-what is to keep your ears open... Yeah, it's all about the fingerprint when it comes to digital recording. I'm not actually looking for "studio quality" but I'd want it to have an output level of at least 80 dB. This would put it at the same level as the M-Audio B48U and Rode HD555, which I'm not looking to spend a ton on. I'm going to stick with the M-Audio because it seems to be the best bang for the buck, and I'm not looking to splurge right now.

There is in fact nothing incompatible between that great theory and the logical and historical study of the first principles that are a priori and are the foundation of all. 5. the cell layer of bronchial epithelial cells and then undergo apoptosis \[[@B9]\]. We cannot exclude that the preferential gene expression of apoptosis-related proteins in our study may be due to the mechanisms of sensitivity of the H3K9me2/3-H3K4me2/3-CTCF network after BEAS-2B was treated with cigarette smoke extract for 24 h. Cigarette smoke extract has been widely used to induce acute lung injury in animals \[[@B17]\]. A previous study also showed that cigarette smoke extract-induced acute lung injury was associated with reduced histone modifications

\\[@B26\\]. However, it is unknown whether and how the altered histone modifications affect gene expression and whether histone modifications can affect the association between CTCF and its binding partners. In this study, we reported that the downregulation of H3K9me2 and H3K9me3 in the promoter region of CTCF target genes in BEAS-2B cells resulted in the upregulation of target gene expression. This effect was further demonstrated by the increase in the H3K9me2/3-H3K4me2/3-CTCF association and reduction of the association between H3K9me2/3 and CTCF in the promoter region of the target genes after the cigarette smoke extract-treated BEAS-2B cells were pretreated with a demethylase inhibitor. These results indicate that changes in H3K9me2/3-H3K4me2/3 association may be responsible for the alteration in expression of CTCF target genes and the CTCF-binding site. Nevertheless, our findings still lack sufficient evidence to elucidate the underlying mechanism by which cigarette smoke extract inhibits the function of CTCF on specific gene expression and the biological effects of
