What's new in Elden Ring:

The Elder Scrolls III: Morrowind is a role-playing game designed by Bethesda Game Studios, released for Microsoft Windows and GameCube in November 2002 and featuring direction by Bethesda Game Studios development veterans Ken Rolston and Jon Povill. The Elder Scrolls III: Morrowind includes expansions that add new areas and new content, and allows the player to begin the game as an individual and follow the story of the game as the character grows. The game centers around a plot taking place before the events of the previous Elder Scrolls, The Elder Scrolls II: Daggerfall. Morrowind is set eight years after the events of Daggerfall, in the same world. The protagonist(s) are referred to in the storyline as Velothi, a name shared with the title of the game, used to describe the diverse race of people inhabiting the world of Morrowind, as the country of Velothi was the first settlers of the Elder Scroll lands. The game was influenced by Dungeons & Dragons and role-playing video games like Ultima Underworld. The artwork, much of which depicts the faces of Velothi written in Vallaki Cyrillic, was created by the Bethesda studio's animator Kat Stotko, who had also created the characters in the previous title The Elder Scrolls II: Daggerfall. The music was written and performed by Pedro Tamariz, with Roberto Rickard and Robert Morey being credited as composers. In 2003, PC Gamer magazine awarded it their Best Roleplaying Game award.{{cite game |author1=PC Gamer |author2=Thomas Palm |title=PC Gamer: The Elder Scrolls III: Morrowind |date=July 2004 |publisher=PC Gamer|page=50}} In 2002, a player survey found that out of over 1,500 players worldwide, over 63% voted The Elder Scrolls III: Morrowind as the RPG they would recommend a friend play. The editors of GameSpy magazine named Morrowind their RPG of the Year, and PC Player was one of the venues of their Best of the Year awards, and awarded the title of "Strategy Game of the Year". The Elder Scrolls III: Morrowind is set in the lands of Jmesa, which lies between the basin of Ishavahár and the western Dal Setau. The province is separated from both Ebonheart Pact and the Dark Brotherhood territories by the Red Mountain Range
