The technology harnesses the power of the PlayStation®4 to bring iconic matches and legendary moments from the past, like Diego Maradona's kung-fu kick goal in the 1986 FIFA World Cup final, and create an overall more immersive experience. HyperMotion is now baked into PlayStation®4 Pro, which enables gamers to see every defender hit by a shot or ball, every ball kicked, and every tackle made with pinpoint precision. "As a team at EA SPORTS we're committed to bringing new and innovative experiences to our games that our fans can enjoy on the biggest screen in the living room," said Greg Goodrich, Senior Producer at EA SPORTS. "In order to deliver our goal of improving the realism of gameplay, we've developed an advanced technology known as HyperMotion. With HyperMotion, we are able to capture the movements of 22 players on-screen at once, including hand and foot animations that have never been captured before. It's the first of its kind." In addition to the 22 players' movements, the technology also detects the ball, the defender, the attacker and the goal, creating the most realistic and spectacular displays of sportsmanship and skill. "With it's ability to track any player in motion, from anywhere on the pitch, HyperMotion technology will enable teams to create more spectacular celebrations," said Jeffrey Brown, Executive Creative Director, FIFA. "Customizable team line-ups, player movements and more, make each game a true spectacle." To access the technology, players need to download the free HyperMotion update, available now for PlayStation®4, Xbox One and PC. Each of these platforms has its own unique set of features to help optimize the game's signature gameplay, including FIFA Ultimate Team Draft Champions mode, expanded face recognition with more improved squad photo options, and Player Impact Engine (PIE) improvements. The full set of features, including the HyperMotion update and additional improvements, are available to download starting today. For more information on the launch of FIFA 22 and the announcement of FIFA Ultimate Team Draft Champions, check out EA SPORTS today.

Ball Physics and Controls for Better Player Control We've completely redesigned the ball physics and controls in FIFA. The new ball feels more solid and responsive, allows for more power and spin, and is more responsive to your player movements. Now you can control the game with your feet, letting you get up to speed before a quick pass, controlling the pass, receiving the pass, and playing the ball with the right foot alone.

New Passing Mechanics With a new passing mechanic, players can control the movement of the ball with precise and natural movements of the foot. Players can bring the ball back towards their body while receiving the pass to control the direction of the ball, or use the instep of their preferred foot to position the ball and move it towards their player's preferred direction, just like they would in the real game. Goalkeeping With improved goalkeeper AI, defenders aren't allowed to hold players when they are directly in front of goal, and the goalkeeper's Determination is altered to prevent some of the most dangerous saves. The keeper is more demanding in 1v1 situations and will dive more towards the ball to block a goal kick with his feet, which changes the angle of the goal kick towards
