Developer EA Sports has said HyperMotion Technology has also been "optimised" to make the player movement and on-ball action more realistic. The FIFA Ultimate Team modes will be the first to use the improved technology, while motion-capture gameplay will also be introduced to FIFA 19 Ultimate Team and Player Impact in FIFA 18 Ultimate Team. According to EA's approach for the "full motion video implementation" of FIFA 22, they are a "team of experts" who "identify the expertise and technical and perceptual skills to capture and process the data to deliver next generation gameplay in FIFA." FIFA Ultimate Team awards events First, FIFA 22 introduces the FIFA Ultimate Team Player Impact awards. These are allocated to players on the virtual pitches via the player's performance on the pitch, on the goals, and other key actions like dribbling, heading and creating chances. Players who earn the highest number of awards will be rewarded with Virtual Currency, which can then be used to buy packs and packs of cards in the new FIFA Ultimate Team. EA SPORTS also reintroduces the Elo rating system in FIFA Ultimate Team, which will allow players to compete in tournaments and against other players of their own skill level as well as against higher-ranking opponents. There will also be a weekly match performance award and number of betting markets, including the Transfer Market, international transfers, and in-game Drafts. Players and teams also earn more rewards for scoring and conceding goals. FIFA 22 will feature an "amazing" new game engine, designed from the outset with an emphasis on player movement and new opportunities for goalkeepers. Power Player Mode (FIFA mode) has been redesigned with better controls and responsiveness, new goals and features, and the return of Classic Mode.
