Q: How can I install a python module using pip? I need to install the bz2 module for python. I get the following messages: pip install -U bz2 Collecting bz2 Could not find a version that satisfies the requirement bz2 (from versions:) No matching distribution found for bz2 And pip install bz2 Collecting bz2 Could not find a version that satisfies the requirement bz2 (from versions:) No matching distribution found for bz2 How can I solve this error? A: When using pip you can always specify the version number to match for: pip install -U bz2==1.0.6 A: The package you are looking for is also available on PyPI, and pip can find it there. For example, if I'm inside a Python shell on my Mac I can do the following: >>> pip install bz2 Collecting bz2 Using cached bz2-1.0.6-py2.py3-none-any.whl Installing collected packages: bz2 Successfully installed bz2-1.0.6 which means that you should be able to do: >>> pip install bz2==1.0.6 Note that while this package isn't directly hosted on PyPI, it is available there, so you can use the version and satisfy the requirement either way.

We've been hearing about Windows 10's "Threshold" — version 1709 — for some time now, and with its release some time in October, many customers who were waiting have finally been given access to Windows 10's new features and OS. You know, "the new kind of Windows". And it is very new — and there's a lot that's changing, particularly for computers used at home. So where should you be going to start? Here are the basics of the changes, in a nutshell: The Start menu has been updated to look more like Microsoft's own apps, including the new "three-bar" Start menu that looks a bit like Windows 8 and the longer Start menu that looks a bit like Windows 7. Also, the icons in the Start menu now fit more into the design of Windows 10, having the same glassy feel as other Microsoft apps, along with the traditional Windows XP/7/8 feel for legacy programs. The color scheme of Windows 10 is changing significantly. You'll see lighter colors on the left and darker shades on the right, and you'll notice some text is a bit darker on the updated Start menu and new apps too. Windows has been improved to boost battery life, and it's just so much faster in general. Windows updates are now scheduled into minutes instead of hours and will be consolidated in one place, rather than randomly across Windows Update. Windows 10 has moved in on the mobile world, and the new OS's Start screen (its version of the Start menu) is mostly a mobile app designed for Android and iOS smartphones. It won't surprise you to learn that

Windows 10 will gain some new apps too — just a handful of the new ones are currently available. Also, more desktop apps will be able to work more like mobile apps and allow
