We examined the influence of laser surgery of the cornea and of the sclera on the retina and the optic nerve. In the examination of 52 patients with a history of corneal and/or scleral laser surgery, we evaluated the intact preoperative status of the retina and the optic nerve, the clinical data concerning the therapeutical interventions, the associated local diseases, and the preoperative and postoperative histological findings of the retina and the optic nerve. To exclude any influence of damage at the optic nerve head, the examinations were performed at a distance of at least five degrees from the optic disc. Seven patients were found to have an optic disc-head-associated retinal detachment; however, this would have had no influence on the results because the examination was performed under general anesthesia. The development of the postoperative disc pallor was associated with an increased postoperative incidence of retinal detachment. The damage to the retina was found to be caused by an increased breakdown of the blood-retinal-barrier as a consequence of intraocular surgery and to be further aggravated by laser surgery, which can be concluded from our results. Q: What's the best way to create a textured 2D corner sprite? I am trying to make a large number of small and simple 2D sprites. I was hoping to put them in a texture atlas and use the texture coordinates to put a texture into the corner. Right now I am generating the texture coordinates with a texture atlas. But I have a large number of small sprites, so I have to generate the texture coordinates (x, y) for each sprite. The problem is: the results are noisy. Can anyone suggest a better way to do this? A: I would argue there is not a simple way to do this, outside of a bit-by-bit pixel-by-pixel approach. An example of this is if you have a sprite consisting of 2 parts: A low/high light pattern And some solid colors You could construct the mask like this: A 4x4 pixel mask is applied in top left, with the dark pixels on the mask in the first block of 2x2 pixels The image is
