Laurence Stein, is a board certified oncology nurse and clinical professor at.A Case of Pyogenic Myocarditis with Differentiated Recurrent Fever Pattern. An 80-year-old woman was admitted to our hospital with high fever of unknown origin and heart failure. Electrocardiography (ECG), echocardiography and laboratory examinations revealed elevated levels of creatine kinase, creatine phosphokinase MB and troponin I. Intracardiac thrombi were not detected on computed tomography. A percutaneous coronary intervention procedure was planned. One week later, coronary angiography showed no abnormality except stenosis of the third diagonal branch. In addition, myocarditis was suspected because of the persistent fever of unknown origin after reperfusion. A skin punch biopsy of her lower limb showed pyogenic granuloma; however, the cause of her fever remained unknown. We performed surgical biopsy of myocardium via transesophageal echocardiography. Histological findings revealed pyogenic granuloma, acute myocarditis and bacterial infection. After a course of antibiotics, her fever improved. She has remained well. In this case, the cardiovascular disease had the episodic fever pattern. This unusual type of fever response to cardiac surgery may reflect the existence of pathogenic endotoxin in myocardium.Q: getting Command not found: netstat I'm trying to use the netstat command. After googling I have seen similar questions here but I think my issue is unique because I cannot find the command in bash. My system is ubuntu desktop and I am using bash. I've searched the command in the file /usr/bin and it's not there. I've also searched for it in packages from the terminal and still there is no netstat available. A: net 1cdb3666d
