a long-time search and read, IÂ .Pratt & Whitney's new efficient-running PW3200 small commercial gas turbine provides an option for medium size generators and other applications that want the high power density of a smaller engine. The redesigned PW3200 powers a new class of medium generators, including the new Interturbine Combustion Turbines (ICT) for India's Kudankulam Nuclear Power Project and the India-Pakistan Neutrino Observatory. It's also designed as a cost-competitive replacement for PW2100 units in medium size utilities and industrial generators, with a new, certified, version of PTFE-burning inlet filters eliminating about 15 percent of the cost of the standard units. The PW3200 is one of the most fuel-efficient, cost-competitive generators being developed for today's power markets. It will replace the aging industry standard PW2100 on the order books. The new first customer for the PW3200 is Sanjeev Gupta's 750 megawatt unit in Durgapur, India, which will be delivered in 2020. The order further supports the advanced construction techniques and certifications achieved on the first India-built PW3000 model, currently under construction. "The PW3200 delivers optimal power and cost for power generation at the medium size level," said Sanjeev Gupta, chair of the Sanjeev Gupta Group, with 546 megawatts of installed base as of 2018. "We are pleased to be the first customer for the new model as we embark on an aggressive build program in India." The new PW3200 engine features advanced aerodynamic features, including a new Z-Nozzle center body and heat-shield. The ICT and neutrino observatory designs use the new PW3200 engine as the combustion turbine engine (CTE) for the medium turbine. For power generation applications, the new PW3200's advanced design delivers approximately 45 percent more COP than the standard PW2100. It will operate over a wider range of temperatures and offer fewer startups and shut-downs than the current PW2100. New low temperature modules (LTM) provide optimal performance at temperatures of -160 to +55 degrees Celsius, compared with -130 to +70 degrees on the current engine. "The Pratt & Whitney PW3000 series offer the same performance as our
