Some brushes have a simple shape, like a triangle or a square, while others are complex, allowing you to adjust color, select edges, change opacity, or choose from a huge range of other options. You can also apply textures, similar to textures used in printmaking or painting. In this article, I'll cover a few more advanced Photoshop brush features. I'll start with the Pixel Replacer tool, which lets you create your own brushes. I'll then show you how to use the Unsharp Mask filter to blur the image, and then I'll explain how to copy and move objects. Using the Pixel Replacer Tool to Create Custom Brushes in Photoshop At the heart of Photoshop are the pixels — the small dots that make up an image on your computer screen. Each pixel has a color assigned to it, and each pixel can be turned into a brush. Using the Pixel Replacer tool, you can easily create your own brushes and then use them in your images. You can also create a PDF file containing the brush settings for one or more of your brushes. A PDF is a way to store certain things, like settings, in a file. To use the Pixel Replacer tool, you must first open Photoshop. Your first brush in the Pixel Replacer will be the default brush. The next time you open Photoshop and go to a new document, the default brush will still be there, ready for you to start editing. Click on the Default Brush tool in the Brush panel (if it's not already selected), and then click on the Pixel Replacer tool. The Pixel Replacer tool is located at the bottom of the Brushes panel. While away from your computer for some time, be sure to back up your files, applications, and settings. If you plan to travel, you should also make a copy of your whole computer with your operating system and applications already installed, so that you can return home with only a blank drive to install everything. Backing up your data is important, so you won't have to reinstall all your software and files when you return. You can use your portable media player or external hard drive, but you should always make two copies of your backed-up files: one that you can store with the company you work for, and a second copy that is kept at a secure location in your home or office. You should also back up information that is stored on your external hard drives, such as contacts, accounting documents, time cards, and anything else that is important to you. Keep your data safe from loss or theft by backing it up! NOTE: Make sure you back up your data before you travel, to avoid any unexpected data loss. Also, if you are away from home for a long time, you will probably want to do an in-home backup of your data. Backup and restore If you must backup and restore your data, you can perform most operations from within your computer, including copying files from one location to another, or performing backups and restoring settings. You can backup and restore your files using two methods: backup and restore, and image backup and restore. Backup and restore You can backup and restore files and folders to an external hard drive, or to your computer's internal hard drive. You can then back up data to another drive or computer that is plugged in to your computer. You can perform this task while your computer is still running, or you can perform the backup
