It's not entirely impossible, sure, but it means you won't be harmed, and as soon as your friend is out of the line of fire, they'll probably come back to you. After all, they really only have to convince you to not shoot them, they don't have to convince you not to shoot their friend. There's no point in trying to make the other officers not shoot you; they aren't your friend and will shoot you regardless. If you don't want to get killed, you have to avoid being in the line of fire (if you don't know, keep your back to anyone who's shooting). If you're in the line of fire and don't shoot, you're going to be shot. There's nothing you can do about it. I was playing as NPC policeman and my friend was shooting at me. I just kept turning him to the side. In one of the missions though, I got ambushed while my friend was running away from me to save him. I shot him in the back and he kept running away instead of going to the other side where I was. There isn't any way to avoid taking a bullet to the leg at the end of the mission. The main problem with this kind of encounter is that the Ambush Team has to make it so that the odds are in their favor to get through the mission, which means that they'll have to kill the team or the police officer that they suspect will shoot at them. This is going to get messy. I've seen it happen with the Ambush Team in a multiplayer game where a player accidentally shot one of their teammates, and they committed suicide after they were sent back to re-spawn. It looked like a particularly hilarious mercy

Bronchoconstrictive response to low-frequency and long-term vibration. Nasal and pulmonary responses to sinusoidal vibration at 1, 2, 4, 8, and 16 Hz in 7 healthy subjects were examined by means of single breaths of radio-opaque dye. The nasal and pulmonary resistances and the length of the conducting airways were measured and the resistances were corrected for geometry. Responses to the lower frequency vibrations (2, 4, and 8 Hz) showed no significant changes; however, the systemic pulmonary resistance decreased and the conducting airways shortened by 0.2 to 0.4 cm. At 16 Hz, a progressive increase in the nasal and pulmonary resistance was measured after 2 min, followed by a prolonged, more accentuated response until the end of the 120-min vibration period. At 60 min, the nasal and the pulmonary resistance increased by 40% and 60%, respectively. The bronchial obstruction occurred after 3 min and lasted for more than 120 min. The value of the area under the nasal resistance-time curve increased as the vibration frequency increased. This airway obstruction was more pronounced in the 16-Hz vibration, and the increase in area of the curve was less with the 16-Hz vibration than with the 4-Hz vibration.
