GAI Corp. joined hands with Zoomie Software to develop tech solutions that would allow control of access to data in websites without a requirement for user certificates. GAI Corp., an audiovisual technology company, and Zoomie Software, an Agilience Company, announced that their first mutual collaboration would be focused on internet access control for websites. A major adoption by the global technology industry of connectionless technology will be used to reduce security risks and simplify access to information, provided by GAI Corp to Zoomie's customers. The first patent is expected to be granted in the next few months. With the first patent granted, GAI has delivered a clear demonstration of its capability to maintain control over access to information in website environments. GAI will be able to use its capabilities to create access control models for websites using the so-called technology of connectionless communication, which will allow security features to be implemented in web pages. Given that the information is not stored locally, it is difficult to keep the data safe and ensure that only authorized users have access to it. GAI will be able to implement authorization mechanisms that require no user certificate or password, and that are based on industry-standard technologies such as OAuth2, a protocol created by Microsoft, and OpenID, a standard developed by Google. This will be done by using a software tool called "Payment Access Manager" that will allow both the provider and the consumer to be configured without requiring any additional development. GAI's "Payment Access Manager" will facilitate the adoption of access control models that comply with all Perioperative atrial fibrillation is a common occurrence with an adverse effect on hospital and patient outcomes. We studied the effect of early surgery for acute coronary syndrome on the prevention of perioperative atrial fibrillation. One-hundred and eighty-four consecutive patients (78 males, mean age 63+/-10 years) who underwent surgery for acute coronary syndrome (ST-segment elevation myocardial infarction, n=69; non-ST-segment elevation myocardial infarction, n=75) were enrolled in this study. The following confounding factors were controlled for by matching patients according to the following variables: gender, age, left ventricular ejection fraction, heart rate, hypertension, diabetes mellitus, hypercholesterolemia, smoking, etc. Two groups of patients were enrolled: a late group of 70 patients who were operated on during the first week after hospital admission, and an early group of 14 patients who underwent surgery within 12 hours of hospital admission. After matching for the confounding factors, early surgery was found to be associated with a lower rate of perioperative atrial fibrillation in all patients (p=0.02), in patients with non-ST-segment elevation myocardial infarction (p=0.03), and in patients with ST-segment elevation myocardial infarction (p=0.02).
