is a game like Dungeons and Dragons, except it's female led and focuses on multiplayer. Interestingly enough, unlike many of its offshoots, Mage Hunters doesn't promote the idea that D&D's heroes and villains are still in the same universe or that characters are inherently sexist. Instead, Mage Hunters' production team is working towards a game which is accessible to both old and new players. To celebrate this, we talked to developers Juliana Kelly and Reanne Nikitaabout the game's motivations and experiences. Mage Hunters is a game about Mage-hunts – this is your chance to be a fearless Mage from another dimension and hunt down and kill evil mages. Your Mage Hunt will be challenging and immersive from the moment you activate an in-game phone to begin your journey. Juliana from the team has been working on gender diversity in games for a while, having founded and worked on the Jam for Change platform. Before becoming Head of Content in the mobile games space, Juliana has worked as a game developer at Capy, with games including Bouncy Castle Zombie Hunt and Chivalry 2. Reanne is a former journalist and current freelance game developer who has worked on small campaigns for games such as WarFace Tactics and Flying Frog Entertainment's Kwirk. 1. How did you develop the story for Mage Hunters? Juliana: When creating Mage Hunters, we wanted to differentiate itself from other 'girl-only' titles by putting women in charge of their own destiny. Our team at Jam for Change involves a diverse range of women. From the Board of Directors to the CEO, our team of 50 is predominantly comprised of women. We wanted to make sure that this gaming universe was unique, so we created a universe in which girls are the ones in charge. A girl could become a master on the 'hunt' like any other character, and learn the different skills and talents needed to fight and survive to become a mage hunter. The games in the franchise are about killing guys/ monsters, while our world is not. Our world is about girls being powerful and about girls learning their own strengths and weaknesses. You can be a 'Shadowmage' and 'head the organization', but you will never be able to 'go on hunts' or 'come out of hiding' in our world. The men you do fight, are mages! The other sisters
