It's likely an Anti-Caching technique as well. I would first make the call to the remote site from your own script, write all relevant data into a variable, and make another call from the JS on the remote site. A: You can't combine JQuery Ajax and Cross Domain calls as they are really two different things. When you call an Ajax request, jquery makes the request and keeps track of the response. It doesn't actually send the request to the server. Instead, it sends a placeholder request. When it receives the response, it puts it into the $.ajax() object. Cross Domain requests are different. They are the

But a year after he made history in becoming the youngest F1 champion ever, his victory at Monza has been overshadowed by events in Malaysia. The news that a shootout between Hamilton and Fernando Alonso had taken place after the McLaren-Honda's British Grand Prix and the fact that McLaren has since been expelled from the sport have cast a long shadow over the occasion. Hamilton says he can't see the issue disappearing anytime soon. "We are doing everything we can as a team to make sure it's taken off the table but from what I've heard it's not being taken seriously, which I guess that's down to us," Hamilton said. "But we need to take it seriously and we need to make sure it stops happening." Hamilton got the better of Alonso for the second year running after two podiums to one over the Spaniard in 2013, with his fourth win of the season. "I tried to take my second win of the year out there today, to take some points away from Fernando and unfortunately for him and the championship it didn't work," Hamilton said. "It's not good to have a situation like that in our sport where there are guys in the pit lane cheating and in Monza we get docked 30 points, it's not good to be able to cheat and be able to take wins away from other people." Hamilton added that while he's not a champion yet, he has felt increasing pressure to make a title push this season. "It's been harder this year, for sure, I've felt that today," he said. "We've got guys really quick around us. I think everyone is a little stronger than they were last year. "Obviously, the car is a lot better and I think we've done a good job of getting this thing right. We've done everything we could have done to make sure that we don't have to fight with these guys. So, I write following code public bool CheckAuthentication(PersonInfo personInfo, string username, string password) { return this.CheckAuthentication(personInfo, username, password, () => { return false; }); } But it gives me error. Error C2039 '():' is not a member of 'AnonymousClassName'. However, when I remove lambda expression, it runs perfectly. I really need to use lambda expression in this function so that I can easily change the process and connect to different API. A: The name of the anonymous method is not what is being used here. public bool CheckAuthentication(PersonInfo personInfo, string username, string password) { return this.CheckAuthentication(personInfo, username, password, () => { return false; }); } Your syntax is defining an anonymous method and trying to use it inside an expression. It isn't, it's trying to use an anonymous class instance. Either define a new lambda expression: public bool CheckAuthentication(PersonInfo personInfo, string username, string password) { return this.CheckAuthentication(personInfo, username, password, () => { return false; }); } Or make the anonymous method a named one: public bool CheckAuthentication(PersonInfo personInfo, string username, string password) { return this.CheckAuthentication(personInfo, username, password, () =>

The airbag apparatus includes a storage chamber storing a gas which is supplied to the airbag, a relief valve for opening and closing communication between the storage chamber and a gas supply line, and a communication line extending between the storage chamber and the relief valve. In the case where the relief valve is open, the venting pressure of the airbag can be reduced by the relief valve. In addition, in the case where the ventilation pressure generated by the relief valve exceeds a predetermined value, a communication between the storage chamber and the communication line is blocked by the communication line. In the conventional airbag apparatus, the relief valve is disposed in a position that is different from the airbag. For this reason, when the airbag is inflated, the gas in the communication line can be mixed with a gas in the airbag, and a function of the relief valve can be affected by the gas in the airbag. If the gas in the airbag is sufficient to close the relief valve, the relief valve does not open even when the venting pressure of the airbag becomes high. If the gas in the airbag is insufficient to close the relief valve, the relief valve opens and releases the gas in the airbag into the airbag system. As a result, the gas in the airbag system is discharged from the airbag, causing the airbag to
