A: I think you can just write `main[, counter = 0][nr_rows_mat_3, nr_cols_mat_3] = textread('yourtextfile.txt', '%d')` A: Your code can't work because you're not specifying the second argument of `textread`. For example, try `textread('Dataset.txt', ',', n)`. If you're using R2016b, you'll want to use `yourTextFile` for the second argument (instead of a filename).

Regarding your edited question, try this: `main[, counter = 0][nr_rows_mat_3, nr_cols_mat_3] = textread(yourTextFile, ',', n)` In the docs I linked to, I find the following note: The second argument is expected to be a character vector of line numbers or numbers in a file number not in the file are dropped. So if you have a text file that looks like this: 1 1 1 1 1 1 2 2 1 1 1 4 3 1 4 1 2 3 1 3 1 1 1 1 1 Then, you'll be reading it like this: `main[, counter = 0][1:4, 3] = textread(yourTextFile, ',', n)` Separate mechanisms for damage, repair, and recovery of influenza-induced damage in the lungs: A study of influenza-induced lung disease in genetically diverse mice. Influenza-induced damage, repair, and recovery responses in lungs are differentially regulated in diverse mouse strains. We studied the roles of antiviral (type I interferon [IFN-I]) and proinflammatory mediators (cytokines) and innate immune mechanisms (reactive oxygen species [ROS] generation and peroxidase activity) in these processes using BALB/c, C57BL/6J, and C3H/HeJ mice. At 6-24 h, reactive oxygen species generation by lung tissue was predominantly suppressed in BALB/c and C57BL/6J mice, whereas proinflammatory cytokines (mainly IL-1beta) were induced most prominently in C57BL/6J mice. At 48-72 h, antimicrobial genes were up-regulated in both strains, cytokines persisted, and
