Q: How to test if a variable has changed in a Django template? I want to avoid a partial update in my template when I change the number_of_recipes in an Ajax request. So I send the variable with my request and I'm trying to find out in the template if the number_of_recipes has changed. Is there a way to tell if a variable has changed in a Django template? Here's my code:

My Request: `def fetch_data(number_of_recipes, final_number_of_recipes): if number_of_recipes != final_number_of_recipes: return HttpResponseRedirect(reverse('index')) else: return http.HttpResponseRedirect(reverse('add_recipe'))`

My Template: `(function() { $.getJSON('/MyApp/fetch_data', {'number_of_recipes': { recipes_number_of_recipes }}, 'final_number_of_recipes': { recipes_final_number_of_recipes }}, function(data) { document.getElementById('recipe_table`

Hundreds of people packed a downtown courtroom in San Diego on Friday for a rare opportunity to watch a jury decide a case involving just one of the hottest issues in the tech industry: whether a person can be forced to unlock his or her smartphone to get a warrant to search its contents. The jury was selected Tuesday to decide whether a cellphone app called Master Key was illegal and violated a federal law that requires people to unlock devices if presented with a warrant. The case pits against each other a San Diego Police Department that routinely uses that technology and the Electronic 0cc13bf012
