A: Executable files (.exe,.bat,.pif,.dll or.com) are not "executable programs". Executable files are files that contain code. To start an executable, you need to "run" it (shortcut, double-click, cmd line) and provide appropriate parameters. You can use cygwin to emulate the UNIX command line on Windows. Download the UNIX shell (MinGW) and add it to PATH (system settings). That should make it possible to directly start most of the command-line-ready UNIX utilities (without Cygwin) on Windows. Some of them will run, but they'll be crippled. For example, the "find" command is a UNIX command. Windows Find will not have any of the advanced parameters. As for your Fortran example, "find" is not a command-line-ready Fortran program. There are only a few of them. Most of them are written in Fortran or C, and thus their performance depends on a compiler, and on your architecture (and platform). In case of Matlab, there's a "Matlab.exe" file. It is a Matlab executable (like an exe) and thus can be run using, e.g., cmd.exe or Start Menu. However, you need a Matlab license to run Matlab. The question is about linux environment. A Unix-like OS is based on the UNIX operating system and its philosophy. UNIX (and thus, Cygwin) was designed and developed to be used in a command line environment. This goal has been quite successful, otherwise the UNIX philosophy wouldn't be what it is. Windows, on the other hand, is a GUI-based OS. So, the "command line
