Warbox is a game of strategy, a single player, turn-based strategy, where players want to be the last standing. The game employs three very different and specialized approaches to achieve the ultimate goal: Victory. The game is played during a winter battle during the cold war between the USA and USSR. The player chooses an army, a stratagem and a side in a russian/soviet confrontation. The game provides three different approaches to the game; Each side has: • Airforce • Nuclear arsenal • Special forces Every commander starts with an airforce, but it is often too much military power which leads to defeat. So, you should be careful and protect your territory with nukes, if you have them. Only when you are sure that your opponent will not blow up your nukes, you can assault his cities with your special forces. Objective of the Game: To win the game, the player must accomplish the following objectives; • Each turn must be used for a certain purpose. • Always help your counter units in place, especially when they are in peril. • Your army should always be active, so you can capture enemy cities and eliminate your enemy. • Your units should be spread out properly (The idea is to attack your opponent's cities) • Before going to war, you should prepare your military arrangements. • Use the Strategic Card system to your advantage. Strategy Cards The cards are tools which each commander over the opponent. Each commander has his own strategy card deck containing 8 cards: • Atomic Bomb • Stratagem (Bault Dog vs Snake) • Stratagem (Bault Dog vs Snake) • Stratagem (Bault Dog vs Snake) • Stratagem (Cannon vs Mountain) Every turn, you can show your commanders the first card and give him a choice. Each card shows another card and with it a strategy for all of your cards, but maybe it is better to use a different strategy on each card. Supply Cards Each commander has his own supply cards which he should use carefully. When you have a supply card, you can use it to generate units and feed them. The cards are: • Food d41b202975

Restores 1911 Brand Recognition With Genuine Parts Camouflage Industries' new WW2 tinted leather and nubuck finish for 1911 pistols is as good as it gets for fans of the original lines. With the 30th Anniversary of the U.S. Army Modern Military Rifle Competition (MMRC) coming up, it's time to reflect on the future shape of the U.S. military's marksmanship programs. In 1957, the Gold Medal Army Tactical Pistol Competition was introduced for junior enlisted U.S. army officials and came to be known as the U.S. Army M17/M27. The pistol-shooting program designated the M17 as the Junior Officer Defensive Pistol, a variant that competed against the M27 and the training pistol for cadet and officer shooters. While the M17 and the M27 fought it out in pre-WWII Japan, Germany and England for recognition as the best, fresh minds and vision were put to work in the U.S., but the U.S. M17 failed to gain the same market share. Since then, the world's land-based armed forces have come to rely on the Browning AR-10 platform, but the U.S. base standardization of the 10mm has not brought U.S. military marksmanship in line with their international counterparts. FRAGMENTED MARKSMANSHIP Almost all long gun competitions depend on the accuracy of U.S. Army pistol shooters. Even in a separate program all its own—the Air Force, Navy and Marine competitions depend on their marksman's ability. It's a hard truth, but in order to compete at a world-class level against others with similar calendars, any U.S. shooter can't be relying solely on their bore sight. This decade of other international shooters dominating the competitions is going to take some serious work to capture the same status, as no shot enters the gun faster in the world than a shot at the target. Currently, the U.S. military doesn't rely on a single major cap or ball shooter who shatters their own low number, but shooters like this single person, well-established shooter is the difference between a guy hitting the bullseye and missing the face of the target. Everyone thinks
