" A: You can create an html file and use the below link to view it. Q: get user input in ifstream and include I am attempting to get user input from a file. I am having some trouble getting the right system to work. The problem is that I can't figure out how to get the input from the text file and include it into the program as a variable. I only need the text that is in the text file to use to concatenate into the program to do a search on the whole text file. Here is what I have right now. #include #include #include using namespace std; int main(){ ifstream inFile; string playerName, playerSprite; string name; inFile.open("duck.txt"); inFile.get(name); inFile.close(); } A: You need to read all the contents of the file into a std::string in the constructor of your object: string inFile; inFile.open("duck.txt"); if(!inFile) { //File does not exist } // Read contents from file inFile.read(reinterpret_cast(&name), sizeof name); inFile.close(); // Now you can do whatever you want with name If you want to support only streams (your example doesn't handle this): stringstream ss; ss > playerName; // Now you can get playerName into name NOTE: If you don't specify a specific type for the stringstream (or stream), it will use text as its internal buffer If you only need the first line of the file, then what you want is to call inFile.eof(): string name; inFile.eof(); // will set inFile.eof() inFile.get(name); // Now you can do whatever you want with name If you want to be a bit more flexible, and allow the user

And the New York Times opined in an editorial that “Democrats have shown themselves capable of mounting an unprecedented victory in the 2018 midterm elections.” But if you listen to the Democratic Party and its progressive wing, the 2018 midterms were an abject failure. The progressive Democratic Party of the Clinton years can't muster any enthusiasm for the politics of opposition. So they've turned to obsessing over 2020 and hoping to change the subject. But their arguments are full of holes. First, it is easy for Democrats to insist that
