I'm building a site that will have several custom page templates. I am optimizing it to improve the performance of the site, but I'm not sure how to speed up my page loads. Right now, I'm using Wordpress and creating templates, but I think that's not the best solution. I am using Google Page Speed and it rates my site as decent for its speed, but I want to get it down a little further. Is there a good way to optimize the speed of my custom pages? Does it help to put CSS and JS inline? I'm using Inline JS, but I found that if I have multiple JavaScript files, that slows down the loading of the page. I don't think I should use single-page-applications like Twitter and Facebook either. Thanks, A: You need to look at other issues that are slowing down your site. Ensure you are using a good CDN, and caching content with memcached. You can also improve performance by trying to restrict access to parts of your site that are either not needed or commonly shared. If a blog post is only shared to the admins
