I am creating a program that requires a secret number to be entered into a JFrame. However, that secret number could be gained from the user entering the wrong number of characters into the JFrame a few times, until the secret number is guessed by the player. I am trying to prevent this by checking the entered characters against a list of all characters and if there are only letters in the JFrame, it will not change the character. However, it is not working like I anticipated, and I was wondering if there was a better way to do this? def check(): letter_num = "" letters = ["a", "b", "c", "d", "e", "f", "g", "h", "i", "j", "k", "l", "m", "n", "o", "p", "q", "r", "s", "t", "u", "v", "w", "x", "y", "z"] for x in range(65,91): for y in letters: if(x == y): letter_num = letter_num

+ x print("The number is:", letter_num) break d0c515b9f4

Well the title pretty much says it all. Every week or two I find large chunks of disk space that has disappeared. I can see a logical explanation for the disappearance of the files that have been deleted, but why would the filesystem be growing as well? It's like a squirting hose. My initial thoughts were that these are probably long-term bits of files that have come from backups, files that have been referenced in a database and aren't linked to. The problem with that theory is that there's never any missing data that I can
