pull the spotlight back on the world body from Russia and China, which have been exhibiting a new assertiveness at this year's forum. As Trump waits for an opening address at the annual gathering of world leaders, world leaders will hear the two formal speeches by international counterparts, including from Russian President Vladimir Putin and Chinese President Xi Jinping. But it's expected that the UNGA's traditional vignette of unexpected celebrity will take a back seat on day one as global leaders and media note the arrival of a president who will walk in to the U.N. building for the first time with a full presidential entourage and state-of-the-art security, much of it due to his own tight security. In anticipation of his arrival, the U.S. mission at the UNGA issued a late-breaking news release on Tuesday morning saying Trump will be arriving on the U.N. campus. Trump's arrival follows a rare, but not unprecedented, visit by Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu last week. The day prior, Trump held a bilateral meeting with Israeli leader that the American side reportedly saw as antagonistic toward the Palestinians. Even in a U.N. assembly that has become accustomed to upstaging speeches by world leaders, it's likely that Trump will be upstaged by his own identity — "the president" and not the world leader, or even the country, the president represents. Putin is widely expected to deliver his first speech on Thursday, as he did in 2014. In that speech, Putin used the forum to highlight his vision for global peace. After that, Xi Jinping will give his first speech. The U.N. traditionally sticks close to its tradition of offering the leading countries at the UNGA a sort of vignette of surprise celebrity: Instead of Trump, the U.S. president in 2015 turned out to be British Prime Minister David Cameron, followed by German Chancellor Angela Merkel in 2016. His arrival in New York City, while guaranteed to turn heads, is also an attempt at a more substantive U.N. meeting than we've seen in the Trump era.
