Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to the field of animal-assisted therapy and, more specifically, to an improved method and apparatus for treating a patient's brain waves. 2. Description of the Related Art The correlation between positive affect (i.e., joy) and the regularity of alpha waves in a patient's brain has been studied to discover how to treat depression. The effect of positive stimuli on the brain has also been studied. An alpha wave is produced by the temporal lobe of the brain and is generally related to a person's "at-peace" state. In the field of animal-assisted therapy, the alpha wave is associated with the emotional responses of the patient to the presence of the dog or other animal. The alpha waves in a patient's brain are more regular when the patient is "at-peace" (also known as being "in a relaxed state"). When the patient experiences "stress" (also known as being "in an anxious state"), the alpha waves in the patient's brain become less regular. During the past ten years, researchers have observed that the presence of a patient's dog in the room during a therapy session has a beneficial effect on the patient's emotional state. In addition, animal-assisted therapy has been shown to be effective in helping people recover from strokes, heart disease, diabetes, and other ailments. Examples of conventional animal-assisted therapy apparatus are disclosed in several U.S. patents including: U.S. Pat. No. 5,536,267, issued to Fretz et al.; U.S. Pat. 0cc13bf012
