In the notebook which had the title or one of the envelope files.Q: Making an asynchronous HTTP request Hi I am currently working on a bunch of authenticated but non persistent HTTP requests and I am making a batch of several requests and then processing them in a particular order. I would like to do these all asynchronously, so that the requests can be made and the requests processed as quickly as possible. I need to note that sometimes the processing can take up to a few seconds. I thought of using Queues, but I was told that this is not best practice because a lot of the requests might be made at once and then the processing is slow because of one of the requests being in the queue. What is the best way of doing this? Thanks, A: You can use the HttpWebRequest.BeginGetRequestStream method. You can download the request and process it later if needed.
