honored practice in medicine. Hydrotherapy is a vital part of many complementary and alternative therapies, as well as a natural component of the treatment of a variety of medical conditions. It has been considered safe as long as proper protocols are followed. Recent studies suggest that the effects of hydrotherapy may not be as benign as originally thought. This review discusses the latest findings on the safety of hydrotherapy. In the past decade, patients with non-small cell lung cancer have been treated by a combination of chemotherapeutic agents, surgery, and radiotherapy. The treatment strategies have shown to be advantageous in a certain proportion of patients in prolonging life and improving clinical outcomes, but no significant survival benefit was shown as compared with the best supportive care. It is unclear whether the survival benefit obtained by the treatment strategies in these trials comes from the additional drugs or from the intensification of therapy. However, the effect of the intensification of therapy is still controversial. Some results suggest that the intensification of therapy will only accelerate the advance of the disease, whereas the data from most trials suggest the intensification of therapy is also associated with higher toxicity and increased mortality from complications. The objective of this ongoing trial is to select the best combination of these three treatments by comparing their benefits and risks with the currently accepted standard of care, ie, the combination of the three treatments, along with best supportive care. Patients will be enrolled and followed up from one centre in China with funding from the Chinese government to investigate the impact of this trial with the existing treatment strategies in China. Inclusion criteria are {#Sec1} ===== *Diagnosed with non-small cell lung cancer without distant metastases*Newly diagnosed and untreated in clinic or chemoradiotherapy before, radiotherapy can be performed*Performance status (PS) 0-2 in ECOG (Eastern Cooperative Oncology Group) scale* Exclusion criteria {#Sec2} ===== *Asbestos exposure*Previous radi
