Id. 15 This Court has held that the manufacturer and/or distributor of a dangerous instrumentality in Ohio is directly liable where it places the dangerous instrumentality in the stream of commerce. Appel v. Wickes Lumber, 199 F.2d 558 (6th Cir.1952); Brown v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 360 F.2d 898 (6th Cir.1966). In Brown, the Sixth Circuit held that a manufacturer and/or distributor is directly liable where he has purposefully placed the instrumentality in the stream of commerce. Applying Ohio law, this Court has held that mere negligence in the design, manufacture, and/or marketing of a product does not give rise to a cause of action under § 402A. Cree v. Cincinnati Milacron Chems., Inc., 574 F.2d 1056, 1060 (6th Cir.1978). 16 It is Plaintiff's assertion that his injuries were caused by a machine that was dropped or "cribbed" in the manufacturing process in 1968 by Defendant. Plaintiff's evidence reveals that he was injured in the 1980's while operating a "cribber." Plaintiff's expert witness, Dr. Beyer, testified at his deposition that the machine in which he was injured was made approximately 25 years ago. Dr. Beyer further testified that the operation of the machine was complicated by the fact that someone would be required to manually insert the paper into the machine. The evidence also shows that the machine was not "cribbed" in 1968. It was installed by Defendant in 1973. The replacement of the belt in the machine was Defendant's responsibility. Defendant manufactured the belt in 1971, and it was replaced on a regular basis. Plaintiff does not claim that the machine was damaged or defective before the replacement of the belt in 1973. Rather, it is Plaintiff's contention that the replacement belt contributed to his injuries
