ambitious project like designing the defense for a “buggery destination,” the first choice is clear: turn to the world’s finest. In this case, it’s the United Kingdom, whose geologists and cartographers have laid the groundwork for the design work on the global tourism hot spot. The draft maps, titled “Nature at Play,” show key areas for global explorers such as Bandon Dunes on the Oregon coast, The Bluff on the Oregon River in Oregon, the Exuma Cays in Bahamas, Cousteau-designed Grand Anse on Grenada and the Cliffs of Moher in Ireland. The new maps and designs point out areas that are worth exploring and the treasure spot of the world. “These are the spots that remain to be discovered, that we still have so much to see,” said Ian Bell, a travel writer and co-founder of the Great British Adventure, a new tourism agency that will promote the new maps to overseas businesses.
