"We know that attention deficit/hyperactivity disorder (ADHD) is highly heritable," says Dr. John Krystal of the Yale University School of Medicine. "We also know that the heritability of ADHD is related to the amount of variation in the dopamine system. But the genetics of ADHD have not been directly linked to dopamine function." To make that connection, Krystal's team at Yale looked at data collected from the Connecticut Correlates of Genome-wide Activity (COGA) Study, a database of more than 50,000 people, and linked it to dopamine system measures in five brain 0cc13bf012
