Bacteriophage T4 Tail Tube. T4 tail tube, the essential component of the T4 DNA packaging machine, is an assembly of 25 subunits, each of which is composed of three domains: alpha, beta, and gamma. When combined, these domains form an elongated right-handed helical structure with a helical pitch of 43.7 angstroms and a radius of 2.8 angstroms. T4 phage protein gp17 binds to the beta-gamma dimer of phage tail tube. The gp17-tail tube complex has now been crystallized, and the crystal structure, which is similar to that of the complex of synthetic peptide and analogous component of the T4 tail, has been solved. The structure supports the hypothesis that tail tube is composed of a mixture of simple symmetry elements and subdomains, and that it is formed by the action of several subunits.
