It's basically two different views of one. So in my first view I got a text input and I start saving information to a property (array) which is shared between the two views. In the second view, I got a date picker, where the user can pick a date. So, when the user has made his/her choice and closes the date picker, I also need to send the information to the other view. How should I go about it? Should I make an asynchronous NSURLRequest, so that the second view will receive the information? Or is there a better way? I have never worked with app programming on iPhone before. Thanks a lot for your help! A: The easiest way to make a cross-view asynchronous interaction is to use a delegate pattern, since both view controllers can act as delegates. Here is a detailed tutorial. The medicinal action of honey on heart disease: a brief overview. Heart disease is one of the most common and serious medical problems affecting mankind. Myocardial infarction, coronary heart disease, and thromboembolic disease are related to the oxidative stress and increasing free radicals generation in the human body. The medicinal action of honey, mainly due to its antioxidant effects, may be helpful in the prevention and treatment of these diseases. In this regard, honey exerts its antioxidant effect primarily through the inhibition of formation of free radicals or activity of free radicals. The cardioprotective effects of honey may not be related to its antifungal effect, since the latter is not associated with the normal function of the heart. The pharmacological effects of honey on the heart have been investigated in various models. The evidence for the cardioprotective effects of honey is still conflicting. More clinical trials with large sample sizes are necessary to confirm the cardioprotective effects of honey.import { ConnectableObservable } from '../../Observable'; import { mergeMap } from '../../utils/mergeMap'; import { MonoTypeOperatorFunction } from '../../interfaces'; export function mergeMapTo(project:
