DUBAI (Reuters) - Iran's parliament has voted to put the election of the country's new president on hold, the semi-official Tasnim news agency reported on Tuesday, in a surprise move that risks undermining the front-runner's bid for power. Hardliners often claim that only they can choose their own president, ensuring that whoever is elected will be beholden to them. "The revolutionary institutions have made a decision to postpone the election and this is an internal matter," parliament speaker Ali Larijani said in a statement reported by Tasnim. "Today the people are engaged in the election... The Islamic Republic's supreme leader has instructed the members of the Guardian Council to carry out the process of revising the (presidential) list," he said, adding that the supreme leader, Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, approved the latest move. The move would be the latest in a series of actions by hardliners in Iran who have over the past year hindered Rouhani's drive to end the country's international isolation. The supreme leader, the most powerful figure in the Islamic Republic, has the final say over state matters, and this is the first time in the country's history that an election has been called off. "We have not seen such a clear signal of divine help towards the president's camp," said Masoumeh Ebtekar, the former spokeswoman for Iran's nuclear negotiating team. Hardliners say that Rouhani, who has won the backing of both powerful clerics and reformist politicians to take office after more than a year of being largely outmaneuvered by the conservatives, is part of a foreign plot to weaken Iran. Rouhani has already attracted the ire of the conservatives for appearing to ignore their advice over the past three months as he has tried to ease international fears that the Islamic Republic is developing a nuclear weapons programme. Iran signed the nuclear deal agreed in July with world powers but has angered hardliners with criticism of other aspects of that accord. They have also taken issue with the president's call for an end to a ban on women attending sports events, including boxing matches. Rouhani has said Iran must stick to its commitments under the nuclear accord and that he believes the Iranian people are tired of war. "This is not

During the third time I checked in to the Eugene House downtown, I asked the receptionist (a friendly, round-faced man named Bill, perhaps 30) if it might be possible to hire the hotel's conference space for one morning a week, especially since I know many people who might find the ID program or support groups to be relevant to them. It seemed to me that the organization would be almost impossible to fund on a volunteer basis, so perhaps some business could be done, although I didn't ask. The secretary at the conference room told me that he had told Mr. Bill she would ask the executive director if it could be done; I decided it was important not to push the matter. I now feel a great deal of sympathy for the former (now deceased) executive director, Laurie McLean, because I know there was a lot of work to be done in the town. I hope someone can provide a good report on what happened to her during that difficult time. Alas, she was not replaced, nor was the official vacancy filled. There have been periodic conferences and meetings in the old conference room, but none have been sponsored by the ID department. There are some, I think, who missed the ID department's presence, and that's a pity. When I learned in the summer that Mr. Bill was going to retire after 33 years in the hotel, I would have liked to have sought the necessary funding. But that is a long story, and I'll save it for another column. In the meantime, I will tell the bare bones of what I saw when I went to see the ID department at the Eugene House. It was a small, informal lobby off the street (downtown), and had a two-way mirror set up, so that it looked as though a conference room were present. There were chairs, a table, a sofa, some plants, and signs that said "Today's Humanities" and "Conversations About the Arts." Near the table was a couch and a chair next to it. Also in the lobby was an information desk, a membership desk and a telephone, which was on an electronic block. Upstairs, there were two floors of rooms. Upstairs, there were 6 small bedrooms on the third floor, which seemed to be the one set aside for ID guests. On each floor was another, larger room, presumably designed for larger groups
