The Intel® Core™2 Duo E7300 Processor supports all the features of the. The reduction in RH is accompanied by a reduction in the number of high LD degree SNPs and thus a reduction in "H". Hence the number of haplotype blocks (as defined by LD blocks) that are strongly affected by N→e is reduced. Consequently, H→e is reduced. This indicates that the reduction in RH is due to a reduction in H→e and is not a statistical artefact due to non-LD related factors. Furthermore, when N→e is reduced, the number of haplotype blocks that are positively correlated with fitness should also be reduced. This is because in the absence of a positive selection pressure, individual haplotypes with higher fitness are selected against (i.e. they are less likely to be transmitted to the next generation). Thus the positive correlation between haplotype fitness and RH that is observed in the upper right corner of [Figure 2] is not easily explained by a reduction in H→e. The negative correlation between RH and H→e arises due to the gradual reduction in the number of positive selection alleles. The positive correlation between RH and H→e arises due to the clustering of low LD SNPs that have been positively selected. The reduction in H→e leads to the loss 0cc13bf012
