The International Neuroblastoma Risk Group (INRG) classification is widely used for prognostic stratification of patients with neuroblastoma

(NB). We analysed the performance of the INRG system as a predictor of event-free survival (EFS) in the present series of 1,030 NB patients, treated over a 13-year period. The INRG variables [age (> or = 18 months or not), stage (I/II or III/IV), MYCN status (amplification or non-amplification), and histopathology (pathological or biological)] were used to classify 1,030 patients from 11 Spanish centres. The outcome was EFS and survival. We assessed the prognostic significance of each variable and of risk groups defined in the INRG as well as in groups formed by combining two or three INRG variables. The 5-year EFS was 41.5% in
