Friday 13 May was an ordinary day. After a long week, I had a restful Friday in. I was due some downtime after a period of compressed downtime and I certainly needed it. Then at 7.45pm, my alarm clock went off. It was time to head into work. I just wanted to go to sleep. Normally I would finish and have a shower, maybe eat something. Instead, I headed straight to my car, still in my pyjamas, to work. I felt cold and clammy. I opened the back door of the van. The temperature inside the vehicle was already below zero. My heart was racing. I knew there was something wrong. I had a temperature of 37.7°C, barely above normal. A quick check of the thermometer revealed that I was below the normal for my age. I knew what this meant. I called my GP. He advised me to get to hospital immediately. I called an ambulance. By now, I was shaking so much I couldn't drive. I sat, shivering, in the back of the ambulance. I was in such pain. No sooner had I been admitted, my heart stopped. An ordinary day turned into a
