Field of the Invention The present invention relates to non-impact printing, and more particularly to a method for manufacturing a non-impact printing head. 2. Description of the Related Art A non-impact printing head is described in U.S. Pat. No. 4,288,939 issued on Sept. 8, 1981 to A. Saito. In the above-identified patent, the various housing parts of the non-impact printing head are individually formed and then bonded together. More specifically, an ink nozzle plate is integrally molded with a die that forms a housing of the non-impact printing head. The die includes a number of rectangular windows each provided with through holes such that the corresponding portion of the ink nozzle plate is exposed at the corresponding through hole. The above-described conventional manufacturing process presents several problems. For example, the dies are fairly expensive because they must be individually manufactured. In addition, the ink nozzle plate is separately molded and bonded to the window-provided die. Furthermore, it is difficult to bond the ink nozzle plate to the window-provided die, since the ink nozzle plate has many recesses to which the resin of the die does not readily adhere. In other words, the ink nozzle plate is more resistant than the resin of the die to adhesive force. This problem is solved by the process described in the above-identified patent, but the process is complicated, and the cost is high. Another non-impact printing head is shown in U.S. Pat. No. 4,872,018 issued on Oct. 3, 1989 to H. Miura. In the patent, a high pressure chamber is provided in the die of the non-impact printing head in which the ink is supplied. While the ink is supplied from the high pressure chamber, the ink pressure is applied to a print head plate. The print head plate is molded out of glass or ceramic, which is relatively inexpensive and is suitable for a print head plate of small size. The above-identified conventional manufacturing process also presents several problems. For example, a large amount of glass powder is allowed 0cc13bf012

I have a very simple scenario in which I have something like this: var A = {}; A.a = "A"; A.b = "B"; var B = A; To me it looks like when I do B, the static members of A are referenced, and the ones that are dynamically created are not (is this right?) The way I want to create the reference so that the dynamic members don't get wiped is as follows: var A = {}; A.a = "A"; A.b = "B"; var B = {}; B.c = A; Is this a good way to do this? I'm going by the theory that one object should not be able to refer back to itself, so is there a way to create a reference to an object that is created dynamically? A: There's an idea of referencing a dynamically constructed object: var A = {}; var B = A; A.a = "A"; A.b = "B"; The problem is that the a property exists in the object before the assignment is done (before B is created), so when you have B, it's referencing the value that was originally assigned to a. You can work around this by doing var A = { get a() { return "A"; },

I was faced with a problem of deciding which type to choose an ideal/matric to represent a graph. Now let's take an example. Suppose that \$G\$ is the graph with \$4\$ nodes labeled as A, B, C, D. It is easy to construct a graph isomorphism between the graph and a 4-cycle \$C_4\$ having nodes labeled as \$1,2,3,4\$. Now suppose that \$G\$ is the following graph If we write \$G\$ as a pair of unordered mappings, it would be: $f(1)=(0,1)$ \hspace{.3cm} $f(2)=(1,0)$ \ \ $f(3)=(1,0)$ \hspace{.3cm} $f(4)=(1,0)$ However, there is another way of writing \$G\$ as a pair of mappings. It would be: $f(1)=(0,0)$ \hspace{.3cm} $f(2)=(1,0)$ \ \ $f(3)=(0,0)$ \hspace{.3cm} $f(4)=(1,0)$ This time I put the mapping on the right side of the domain, i.e., $f(x)$ should be the domain element of a function \$f\$, which maps the domain element \$x\$ to the image element \$f(x)\$. My questions are: 1. Is there any rule for choosing one of these representations and what are the advantages and disadvantages of each? 2. In which area of mathematics is this topic studied? 3. One of the thing that confused me a bit is that the mappings are defined on the set \$[1,4]\$, and not \$[0,1]\$. What is the reason for that? A: A graph \$\Gamma\$ is often viewed as a particular kind of relation \$\{(x,y):x,y\in\Gamma\}\$, where \$x\$ is the source and \$y\$ is
