Producing our own SACD releases will drive the costs down · as we can do it in-house · and as long as we're going to be releasing our own SACD releases, does that mean it is no longer A. There is a need to "legitimise" this approach and build \hat{A} it in a way that releases other's SACDs out of the box, and \hat{A} . reinvents as necessary (eq a monster acoustic SACD release would be Â. $\hat{a} \in \hat{A}$ able $\hat{a} \in \hat{A}$, but we're not in a position to \hat{A} commit to that at the moment) Why would anyone want to \hat{A} release their own SACD under a different label to the rest of \hat{A} the SACD releases? There is already a commercial \hat{A} element to the existing SACD release and a fairly well \hat{A} established market of people who will buy these releases. Once we have \hat{A} · a commercial element to the SACD releases we will take \hat{A} · full advantage of it to ensure we get a better \hat{A} return on our investment in the SACD releases. If we \hat{A} keep doing a cheap SACD release then the only people we make any \hat{A} money from are the ones who haven't paid for it yet and $\hat{A} \cdot \hat{A} \cdot$ It's not just about the money, as long as it's the kind of \hat{A} SACD release we would put our own name on. We have got \hat{A} a number of competitions running right now and we're already · getting our own supporters

On a street corner next to the embassy, they were briefly detained by police. Elsewhere, a small protest of about 50 to 100 people reportedly unfurled a giant banner that read, "Hasta la Victoria Siempre!" - "Until Victory, Always!" It was a reference to the slogan of the Cuban revolution and pro-reform movement. No arrests were reported. Earlier this month, Amnesty International issued a statement condemning the Bush administration for not fully lifting the economic embargo on Cuba. The organization called the embargo "a serious restriction on the human rights of a nation state which ranks among the world's worst human rights violators." Cuba has been under the control of the Communist Party since the 1959 revolution, which overthrew the dictatorship of Fulgencio Batista. The embargo has severely limited the flow of communication between the two countries.
