Isolation of pathogens associated with respiratory and diarrheal disease in hospitalized children in Guyana, 1969-1976. The distribution of microbial isolates from patients hospitalized with respiratory and diarrheal diseases in Guyana during the period 1969-1976 was investigated by using temporal data analysis. The isolates from respiratory infections were obtained from the nasopharynx, trachea, and sinuses.

Enteropathogens were identified using standard biochemical tests or by bacteriophage typing. Of the 197 isolates received during the period 1969-1976, there was a general increase in the rate of isolation of enteropathogens and a temporal separation of the isolates in the summer
