Many individuals drink wine with meals, generally, with dessert, but most meals include wine. A modern home kitchen offers a wide array of beverages to choose from, including non-alcoholic beverages such as water and iced tea, alcoholic beverages such as coffee, wine, and beer. Many modern home kitchens offer wine chillers. A wine refrigerator, sometimes referred to as a wine chiller, wine cabinet, wine cooler, or simply a refrigerator, is a device used to keep wine at desired low temperatures. These systems allow for much more rapid cooling of wine than is possible in an open cupboard or similar device, especially when the amount of wine being stored is large. Some wine refrigerators also function as an ice maker and serve to keep wine in a desired temperature range. There are several concerns with the traditional open cupboard or refrigerator type of wine bottle storage system. First, the amount of area that is necessary to hold enough wine bottles to serve a large dinner is a concern. Second, the amount of space that is occupied by that amount of wine bottles is a concern. Third, the strength of the structure holding the wine bottles in place is a concern. All too often, the wine storage structure in which the wine bottles are stored can move with the wind or other forces, and these movements cause wine to spill over the storage
