Cellular and humoral immunity was studied in a patient with thalassaemia major and recurrent infections due to intracellular bacteria. The patient showed anergy to T and B mitogens. Total lymphocyte count, T cell population and T cell subsets were within normal range but T suppressor cells were found to be increased. Lymphocyte transformation in vitro was partially impaired but still responsive to autologous and allogenic cells. Specific cytotoxicity was also partially reduced. Normal response to phytohemagglutinin was observed. The patient had a delayed hypersensitivity reaction to intravenous Dacarbazin. BCG also induced transient delayed hypersensitivity. The results suggest that the cellular immune deficiency in our patient is secondary to defective cell-mediated immunity.About This Game Key Features: Four different campaigns to play Over 60 levels!
