Integrins are a family of cell adhesion receptors that mediate cellular adhesion and migration by linking the actin cytoskeleton to the extracellular matrix (ECM). Two different alpha2beta1 integrin subunits (alpha2beta1A) mediate adhesion and migration of cells on type IV collagen (Col IV). Our previous work has identified a novel function for the alpha2beta1 integrin in binding, via an unidentified mechanism, the interaction of an invasive carcinoma cell line, MDA-MB-231, with its ECM substrate. Subsequently, we identified that a synthetic peptide corresponding to the alpha2beta1 cytoplasmic domain (denoted alpha2cyt6, residues 517-537) when immobilized on a biosensor chip inhibits cell adhesion to Col IV. Here, we show that alpha2cyt6 inhibits binding of a "reporter" cell line that bears the beta1 integrin subunit of the milk lung epithelial (MkL1) cell line, to Col IV. We have also identified the binding region of the alpha2 cytoplasmic tail on Col IV by using truncated versions of the Col IV molecule. We report that an 18-
