VNC is a remote control software which can control the desktop remotely on the device. But this version of VNC can not create a new desktop to control your websites. Instead of this, this version of VNC can only control the desktop that already exists on the device. Now here's a piece of news that might surprise you! Apple and the Canadian carrier Telus have entered into a joint venture agreement to improve customer service, especially in rural areas, and to provide new products and services to their customers. What is it about Telus that brought Apple and their brilliant design chief to Canada's second-largest wireless carrier? The reasoning behind the proposed joint venture is that Telus has always been Apple's no.1 wireless customer. This relationship began back in 1999 when it became known that Steve Jobs had personally picked Telus to be the first Canadian carrier to stock the iMac. After that, Telus built out a large number of native apps for the iPhone, and even allowed Apple to create a version of their own customer support and repair services. The thing with Telus is that they are a very different kind of carrier. With the exception of TELUS TV, they have a very "small" and "local" customer base. Many of their customers buy their phones at the very store, with no distribution from Telus. It is highly probable that the Telus partnership is also about marketing. The Telus Group sells its products through the very large LINC brand. They also invested in the social network Paltalk, as well as Amazon. Apple keeps on selling through its own online stores, but they also sell through many retailers, like Costco. The deal with Telus is more similar to the Costco partnership with Sam's Club. The proposed joint venture will be a 6d1f23a050
