Recently I was working on a project with the goal to produce Zip file archive that uses zlib compression. We decided to use UNIX standard compression since it's simple and it's licensed under a very liberal terms (e.g., GNU licenses). So, I started experimenting with it, but I hit a snag. The archive is valid, but it created.Z.file.gz file extension, while the API and SDK both expect.gz. Which kind of file extension should I use? A: I think it depends what 6d1f23a050
