Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an image processing apparatus having means for detecting a specific object and for generating an image of the specific object. 2. Related Background Art In the conventional image processing apparatus, images of a specific object detected from a plurality of images are generated on the basis of the plurality of detected images. As such apparatus, for example, there have been proposed a variety of apparatus to generate the image of the particular specific object using the face of a person as the specific object (Japanese Unexamined Patent Publication No. 62-86813). The system is arranged so as to detect the face image of a person from a plurality of images obtained by monitoring a camera at a traffic control station or the like and then to display the detected face as a speech message or an alarm sound. When detecting the face image from a plurality of images in the aforementioned apparatus, a specific object is detected, in many cases, by use of the input face image. However, if the specific object is not detected, i.e., an object different from a person, is detected, then it is not possible to display the image of the detected object. In this case, it is necessary to designate the object as a new specific object, or any of the object to be selected as a specific object is replaced with another object and the object is then selected as a specific object to display an image of the object selected as a specific object. Thus, for example, in the case where the color of a face image of a person is similar to that of a seatbelt, the image of the seatbelt is displayed as the image of the face image of the person. In such cases, a user must judge whether the seatbelt is really a part of the person. Since the seatbelt may be easily attached or detached from a person, the user will not recognize that this image is not the face image of the person unless he/she recognizes a person by the person's face image. Thus, the user
